The Great Wave Arrives

From 1901-1910 the largest number of immigrants from Craco arrived in America. Over 687 entered, primarily through Ellis Island, including 69 entering at Boston, Massachusetts, about 200 miles north of New York City (see story pg. 3).

This was over one-third of the population of the village (reported as 1,696 in 1901). By the end of the decade, more people of Cracotan decent lived in New York than there were in Craco with 1,167 immigrants entering New York since 1880. Along with their children born here, they would have exceeded the 1911 Craco population reported as only 1,359 people.

During the prior 20 years, New York City changed greatly with ethnic enclaves developing into neighborhoods populated by Eastern and Southern European immigrants. The neighborhoods included The Lower East Side (predominantly Jewish), Yorkville (German & Irish), Jewish Harlem, and Little Italy. These communities made life for immigrants more comfortable by providing access to familiar food, culture, social life, commerce, native language newspapers and theaters.

The earlier Cracotan arrivals in New York were settled and able to help the newest immigrants. Often, an earlier immigrant upon returning from a visit from Craco helped guide the new arrival on their voyage to America and through immigration. They also could provide advice, assistance in getting settled, and jobs.

However, conditions here were very different from Craco. Although there was a large Crachese population, now it was surrounded and dwarfed by other Italian immigrants who also settled in the area. Life in Craco was based on agrarian activities and the church. Cracotans arriving in New York immediately gave up one of the foundations of their existence—farming.

Most field workers now became laborers or pushcart men, while those who had a trade back home followed them here. By 1901, a mutual aid organization, the Società San Vincenzo Martire di Craco was established to help each other and also provided an annual feast day celebration of the town's patron saint. A replica of the saint's statue was ensconced in St. Joachim's Church allowing the immigrants to maintain some accustomed traditions.

Immigrant families were presented with new possibilities. Children were required to attend school. Once exposed to this environment, filled with other nationalities and cultures, children became more worldly than would have been possible at home. As they learned they acquired the English language of their new home while retaining the dialect of their parents. Now with a foot in both worlds, they used the solid foundation provided by their background to take advantage of the opportunities and growth available to them in America. ■

Italian groceries and specialty stores were important since staples from farms were no longer possible to make in New York as immigrants became laborers instead of farming.

Basilicata: Metaponto and the Ionian Coast

The spirit of Magna Graecia still prevails in the villages and countryside of this area. First colonized by Greeks around 700BC, the Ionian Coast extends from Metaponto to Nova Siri. It has wide sandy secluded beaches bordered by pine, eucalyptus trees, scented Mediterranean undergrowth, and citrus fruits.

Bernalda — positioned between the Bradano and Basento Rivers, it was a center for Lucani and Greek settlement. Situated on panoramic hilltop, it was rebuilt in 1496 with the original houses making up the ancient town center. The surrounding countryside has farms dating back to the Swabian-Angevin Era.

"It has wide sandy secluded beaches bordered by pine, eucalyptus trees, scented Mediterranean undergrowth, and citrus fruits."

Metaponto — this ancient town dates back to pre-history. It became a Mycenaean trading village and by 800BC was under Greek influence. The noted mathematician Pythagoras moved his school here in 532BC. Also visited by more notorious individuals such as Spartacus who sacked the town, it began a decline. By 1167 it was renamed Torre di Mare and only in the 18th century did the ancient ruins come to light. In the mid-20th century the modern town and ancient ruins were restored. The Marinella Stornara Nature Reserve also is in the town.

Nova Siri — changed its name in 1872 to reflect the Greek heritage from the Latin name Bollita. The town center has a castle and in the surrounding area known as Cugno dei Vagni district there is an Imperial era Roman villa and thermal baths.

Pisticci — has traces of habitation dating back to the Iron Age. Greek settlers arrived in the 8th century BC. A vase painting school existed there under Pietro di Pisticci, whose works are now museum pieces. With the arrivals of the Normans in 1000AD a feudal estate was set up. In the 1960's industrialization changed the town from its agrarian roots.

Policoro — was a thriving trading center in the Middle Ages. Its roots go back to the 7th century BC with Greek farmers settling the area. Archaeological finds were significant enough to create a park that discloses the ancient town. There is also a National Museum which explains the Hellenization of the valleys away from the coast. The town also encompasses a nature reserve known as Bosco Pantano. It contains rare fauna, wild boars, roe deer, martens and otters.

Rotondella — overlooks the Metaponto plain and provides panoramic views from a 16th century tower. The town was built on unique spiral design with concentric roads leading to the top of the town.

Scanzano Ionico — is a modern town in the area located between the Agri and Cavone Rivers. A seaside resort with long sandy beaches it also has historic elements. The Termitito dating to the 8th century BC has Roman baths, the Recoleta has stately feudal homes and the "Andriace" farmhouse, and the Torre di Mare has a rampart tower. ■

Craco Immigration—Boston

Although New York was the primary port of entry for immigrants from Craco, there were several other ports around the country that could have served them including Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, and New Orleans. Of these ports a search of manifests (using Ancestry.com) identified 69 additional Crachesi entering the US but only through the port of Boston.

These arrivals occurred in a very narrow period, from December 1901 to March 1903. They were also sporadic with 2 individuals arriving in December 1901, 64 during 1902 and 3 in March 1903. The 1902 arrivals came in 5 different voyages.

Three ships owned by the Dominion Line, a Canadian firm, were responsible for all the arrivals. The ships, SS Cambroman, SS New England, and SS Vancouver carried them from Naples to Boston. When they arrived they were processed at the Boston Immigration Station and then had to make their way to New York which was the destination they all gave on the manifests. Whether this portion of the trip was included in the fare from Italy isn't known nor do we understand why these immigrants chose this route. Perhaps the Dominion Line, which normally had service from Liverpool England to Quebec City and Montreal Canada, offered a better fare during this period.

The surnames of the Cracotan immigrants arriving on these ships include (names as listed on the manifests with misspelling) of: Basilio, Branda, Cainco, Castellano, Cigliano, Constantino, Conte, Cortle, Coute, Ferante, Gaetano, Gambaglione, Infantino, Iocavetti, Laivaro, Lambio, Lauria, Lavaro, LaVecchia, Lornezio, Lorubio, Lunati, Mannozi, Manhattan's Little Italy—this 1905 photo taken on Mulberry St., shows the vibrancy and concentration of the immigrants living in this ethnic enclave. The pushcart vendors were common in this era and provided income opportunities for many Crachesi. The streets were now paved and gaslights are visible on the sidewalks showing the improvements in conditions. However, the tenement buildings, although newer, still were crowded and densely populated.

Education—Italian immigrant school children are shown in the photograph above. The school system was the most important aspect in the assimilation process as students acquired skills and knowledge allowing them to compete in their new home. They were also able to help their parents with their new skills in language and understanding of American culture.

Italian shoe-shine boys in Columbus Park— Then called Paradise Park in Little Italy, many of them probably lived in the tenement buildings in the background which were on Baxter St., the area that housed so many Cracotans.
